

Reggie Selma

Former Presidential Photojournalist

For over 30 years, Reggie Selma was one of CNN's most dedicated and knowledgeable photojournalist based in their Washington, D. C. bureau. He has traveled across the globe filming every U.S. president from Reagan to Obama. Reggie has also covered some of the world's most iconic figures of our time. Leaders such as Nelson Mandela, Mother Teresa, Pope Paul II, and The Dalai Lama giving him a front row to history.

After a long and successful career behind the lens, Reggie has now stepped in front of the camera as an inspiring, and entertaining speaker. Reggie's unique behind the scene perspective gives you a rare glimpse that few are able to witness. Reggie Selma grew up in the "Jim Crow" south of Birmingham, Alabama. His childhood was that of white and colored restrooms, church bombings, and fire hoses.

But, a strong and loving family that taught him that you can overcome any obstacle, even legalized discrimination, with faith, an education, and a belief in yourself. With that guidance, in 1982, Reggie became a media pioneer, becoming CNN's first African- American cameraman assigned to the White House. Reggie has lead a "Life Less Ordinary" than most.

And his presentation will be a perfect match to help you create an engaging, and entertaining program that your group, or organization would love to attend, and one they will surely talk about afterwards.
