

Tim Roemer

Former U.S. Ambassador to the Republic of India, Commissioner of the 9/11 Commission, Former Congressman (D-IN)

Global Security. Ambassador Roemer dedicated much of his professional career to strengthening the U.S.'s national security. With his experience in the House, on the 9/11 Commission, and as the ambassador to India, he addresses the current state of our nation's security and our country's role in a global security context. From weapons of mass destruction and terrorism to radical extremism and arms proliferation, Roemer addresses the top issues with a generally optimistic tone. He also discusses how our relationships with other countries – notably India – affect our security and what we can do to be safer.

Business in India. With his experience as ambassador and in helping India become the 12th leading trade partner of the United States, Tim Roemer knows how to get things done in India. From first going “local” in one of India's 28 states and how to deal with the dichotomy of the first and third world demographics, he discusses the keys to succeeding in one of the fastest growing countries in the world. He also addresses how companies need separate Chinese and Indian business models and how to approach the millions of people moving from poverty into the rising middle class.

The Indo-American Relationship. Tim Roemer addresses the Indo-American relationship in terms of diplomacy, security, trade, and culture. Our relationship with India grows increasingly important as the country outpaces China in terms of growth and the Indo-Pakistani border grows more tactically important in terms of national security. Roemer outlines the ins and outs of our relationship with India, how business in India can boost our economy, what we can learn from the country, why it is important, and how we can help each other.

Politics. As a former congressman (D-IN) and a former ambassador, Roemer can discuss the current political environment and the hot-button issues that will affect the next election. From education and workforce issues to economic and fiscal matters, he provides insight on the state of these backbone issues in America.

American in the 21st Century. Believing strongly in America and America's dominance, Roemer addresses our nations' challenges and strengths in the 21st century. He believes we have the ability and capacities for innovation necessary to prevail in a global environment and discusses what we need to focus on as a country in order to maintain our position as the most economically and geopolitically secure nation in the world.
