

Paris Train Heroes

Anthony Sadler, Alek Skarlatos, Spencer Stone

Fostering the Relationships You'll One Day Need Most. One aspect of Anthony Sadler, Alek Skarlatos, and Spencer Stone's story remains consistent before, during, and after the episode on the train: their close friendship. Here, the trio discusses why it's so important to maintain relationships—highlighting that you never know when they'll come in handy or when you will need to rely on others to get through. Admitting that they sprang into action mostly to back one another, Sadler, Skarlatos, and Stone move audiences to evaluate the relationships in their own lives and reinvest time and energy where it matters most.

Finding Success on the Other Side of Fear. There are several things Anthony Sadler, Alek Skarlatos, and Spencer Stone were afraid of before August 21st, 2015—facing a terrorist head-on and public speaking, to name a few. Here, the trio takes audiences behind the headlines to share their first-hand accounts of what happened that day and how they found the courage within to stop an attack that could have claimed up to 500 lives. Sadler, Skarlatos, and Stone then discuss how pushing past fear in all of its forms has changed their lives for the better, and why it's so important to extend your comfort zone in order to achieve your full potential. An incredible look at what happens when you're forced to overcome your own limitations, this talk motivates audiences to abandon their fears and move forward boldly in every aspect of their lives.

Embracing the Unexpected. Before they fought and subdued a would-be mass murderer on a train to Paris, Sadler, Skarlatos, and Stone were a college student, a member in the Oregon National Guard, and an enlisted Airman. Acting in a Clint Eastwood-directed movie? Not on their radar. But as Sadler, Skarlatos, and Stone share, embracing unexpected opportunities—and challenges that hopefully others never have to face—has been the key to success in their lives so far. With this talk, the trio opens up about what it was like to fight off a terrorist and how they made the decision to act. They then walk the audience through what came after, from the media frenzy to their hit book, and where they are now. Incredibly motivational, this talk is a first-hand account of what can happen when you say yes to the unexpected.

The Importance of Preparedness: Doing the Right Thing at the Right Time. Looking back on that fateful August day, Paris Train Heroes Anthony Sadler, Alek Skarlatos, and Spencer Stone had no way of knowing that they would find themselves face-to-face with a terrorist armed with an AK-47. And while the media was eager to make them out as war-tested military vets, the truth is that the young trio of childhood friends had never been on the front lines. With this talk, Sadler, Skarlatos, and Stone tell the true story of the events that led up to the train attack, detailing the ways friendship, a strong belief system, faith, and determination led to their incredible course of action. This moving talk will inspire audiences to tackle feats with courage and understand the importance of being ready to spring into the correct course of action at a moment's notice.
