Douglas Hurley

NASA Astronaut and Winner of the Congressional Space Medal of Honor, First SpaceX Crew Dragon Commander, Marine Fighter Pilot & Business Executive

Navigating Leadership: Lessons from Space and the Skies Setting a clear vision is crucial in both space missions and leadership roles Collaborative efforts required for successful missions and how it relates to building effective teams in leadership Strategies for fostering teamwork and leveraging diverse strengths Adaptability is key to overcoming unexpected challenges both in space and in leadership roles

Last to First: The Personal and Professional Story of the Last Shuttle Pilot and First Dragon Commander The end of the 30-year Shuttle era and the emotions associated with it My role as the first Dragon commander and the experience of working with Space X The importance of collaboration between public and private sectors in space exploration and what it means for the future The personal doubt and family sacrifices during an incredibly challenging nine years as an astronaut

A Career of Managing Risk: My Thirty-Year Journey in Aerospace Preparation and training mitigate risk in high-stakes environments The importance of calculated risk-taking in achieving ambitious goals Strategies for making critical decisions under pressure How adaptability and flexibility are essential in risk management