

Nick Houghton

Former Chief of the Defence Staff of the British Armed Forces

Geopolitics In a geo-political context defined by uncertainty and instability, and with an unrivalled and very recent background in military leadership, General Houghton can discuss the causes of global conflict, the likely sources of future disputes and how these are likely to impact investment and business globally.

Leadership As head of the UK military General Houghton has unique experience in leading a huge and disparate group of individuals. This role involves high-level political liaison and the ability to manage up as well as down. In his view, “the fundamental drivers of human behaviour have not changed much in a thousand years, but are submissive to intelligent leadership.” He is able to apply the skills, discipline and characteristics of military strategy and motivation to the modern business environment.