General B. Chance Saltzman

Retired Four-Star General and Second Chief of Space Operations

Leadership in High-Stakes Environments. How do leaders build teams capable of making critical decisions under pressure? General Chance Saltzman takes audiences behind the scenes of military space operations, using lessons from his experience leading America's newest military branch to illustrate the principles of effective leadership in uncertain environments. Through firsthand lessons from decades of command, he reveals why sound decision-making begins long before a crisis and how leaders can cultivate the trust and resilience that sustain high-performing teams. Saltzman presents a practical leadership framework executives can apply to strengthen their organizations' ability to respond to disruption.

The New Frontier of National Security. As the United States and other nations expand their presence in space, competition for strategic and military advantage is redefining national security. What was once primarily a domain for exploration and scientific discovery is now central to defense strategy, economic interests, and international competition. General Chance Saltzman, former Chief of Space Operations, examines the evolving role of space in global security, the threats emerging as more nations develop military space capabilities, and the implications of new technologies for the future of warfare. With firsthand experience shaping U.S. space strategy, he offers his perspective on what leaders need to understand about the next era of space activity and its consequences for security and commerce on Earth.
