

Steve Boyes

Conservationist and National Geographic Explorer

The Last Wilderness Steve Boyes inspires audiences with adventure and stories of exploration and the power of fresh perspectives. Through the use of stunning high-quality images and video, he offers an eye-opening look at the world around us, including the Okavango Delta—Africa’s last untouched, unpopulated wilderness. He encourages audiences to look beyond their current environment and see possibility. “Wilderness cannot be restored or recreated, only destroyed,” he says. “We are about to lose our last glimpses into pre-history.” Boyes believes the rich biodiversity of the delta is the key to maintaining our environment, quality of life, and connection to the planet, and he takes audiences on an epic journey through Africa so that they come to understand why tapping into this part of themselves is a necessary adventure.